Overview:

This workshop will discuss the emerging field of psychedelic medicine and the ways in which it represents a valuable opportunity for counsellors, psychotherapists, and spiritual care practitioners to expand their range of service.

Psychedelic medicine is poised to become a new paradigm in mental health care. We are currently witnessing a resurgence of research in the therapeutic application of psychedelic substances for psychological disorders, addictions, and existential distress. Substances that have for millennia formed part of humanity's healing traditions are now being studied with renewed vigor for their potential therapeutic benefits. Further, clinical studies of psychedelic-assisted therapies are revealing the central role of spirituality in healing outcomes.

Drs Monnica Williams (Psychology, uOttawa) and Anne Vallely (Religious Studies, uOttawa)'s presentation will focus on the need for education and training in the emerging field of psychedelic research and therapy.

This event is free, and we invite you to join us on November 30th for this great learning opportunity.
